Not illustrated. 1891 Excerpt: .steadily accomplished the promised devotions, and when the bright chrysanthemum bloomed she would bind bouquets of the symbol in honor of Blessed Margaret Mary, to win her powerful intercession with the Sacred Heart. To the great consolation of herself, her father and her kind disinterested teachers, the pious girl did not experience any new attack of her disease. Rejoicing and with a heart full of gratitude, she took upon herself to inform the priest of her father s intention to give the church an organ, and begged that a suitable place be reserved for the donation. In course of time Agnes left school bearing all the most coveted honors of the Institute, which deemed itself happy to send out a model of youthful piety, one adorned with various mental acquirements, and imbued with that genuine, graceful modesty which is the most desirable ornament of the female sex. Words are inadequate to describe the pleasure of Mr. Y in introducing his accomplished daughter to their admiring and congratulating circle of friends. One day Mr. Y proposed giving a dinner in honor of some political associates, and the busy Agnes was suddenly interrupted in her domestic affairs by the arrival of a letter, reminding her of the promised organ and saying-- Things were in readiness for its reception and erection! Agnes hailed the missive with unfeigned happiness! Now she could give the Sacred Heart of Jesus the tangible proof of His gracious answer to prayer! Her countenance was...
